Sense Perception and Reality

A Theory of Perceptual Relativity, Quantum Mechanics and the Observer Dependent Universe

Sense Perception and Reality examines the remarkable similarities between philosophical idealism and the Copenhagen Interpretation of quantum physics. The book looks at perceptual relativity involving animal senses, neurology and cognitive psychology. It concludes the universe is observer dependent and varies with the sensory apparatus used to observe it. The Copenhagen Interpretation is examined and perceptual relativity would appear to apply in the quantum world. The Copenhagen Interpretation suggests the universe is observer dependent, the same conclusion that is found in philosophical idealism. The book concludes by examining the consequences of an observer dependent universe and shows that such a universe is quite consistent with a modern objective science.
